BLADES OF GRASS.
Oh, waving, nodding blades of grass
What is the spell you're weaving over me?
What is the charm, sweet, that makes me
Bring back memories up to store me?
I hear—how like a dream it seems
The cows within the pasture ring;
I hear the merry, wandering brook
Mid ferns and moss and boulders flowing.
I see the clover, pink and white;
The buttercup and white-weed sending;
The barefoot boys and girls at play;
The sunshine and the shadow blending.
I see the birch-tree's hanging bark—
Half-opened buds of nature's spring—
I see the maples when the sun
Comes through the rich green foliage glowing.
The zig-zag fence, the field of corn
With silken fringe hung from his bosom;
And all the scented air was filled
With floating, breeze-tossed apple blossoms.
A dear, sweet face—could I but know
All framed in cloud—could I but know
I should not, but as I look I see
The eyes beam love, the sweet mouth blossoms.
Ah, mother mine! thou lover mine!
The waving grass seems full of glory;
And every nodding plume brings back
My childhood's gentle, "old, old story."
DONALD ROBB.

One fraudulent or mismanaged mining enterprise in any mining district is sure to induce many capitalists to decline making many investments in that peculiar location. The fact that money has been lost therein is all sufficient to prove the worthless nature of its mineral deposits in the hands of those not well informed in mining matters. Many mining districts possessing almost unlimited wealth have become nearly desolate, because fraudulent conductors of mines were centered on them. A glowing account of a rich find in any locality is certain to cause a rush of speculators and capitalists into it. On the other hand the bursting of a bubble mining scheme in any locality will cause a sudden stampede therefrom. The good reputation of a mining district is just as important to its continued prosperity as that of a business man, and either may be destroyed by the disastrous results of but one fraudulent transaction. —S. F. Ketchum.

The Worst Enemies of the Silver Industry.

Herostatus, the fellow who burned down the famous temple of Diana, at Ephesus, for the sake of notoriety, is the prototype of those journalists, who, at seats of the industry of silver mining, on every possible occasion, are urging that the dollar of 412½ grains of standard silver is not an honest, proper monetary equivalent for the gold dollar of 25 8-10 grains, nine-tenths fine, and that its coinage therefore should be discontinued. Practically, what these modern notoriety-seekers work for is the degradation of silver from the rank of a money metal, or its disuse as a money factor everywhere. Unquestionably, that would be the inevitable result should this country, which produces nearly if not quite fifty per cent. of the silver supplied annually by the mines of the earth, determine that silver cannot any longer be honestly coined and used concurrently with gold at the rate of 412½ grains, nine-tenths fine, to the dollar, inasmuch as the present full legal-tender silver money of Europe and Asia, to the extent of more than $2,000,000,000, circulates at a valuation in gold of 3.06 per cent. higher than in our standard dollar. When every other people are using silver, including the Indian subjects of the British Empire, to the extent of more than $2,000,000,000 in all their daily business and retail dealings, for any one to set up that our people, nevertheless, should not use the product of their silver mines as money at such a rate as in the dollar of 412½ grains, logically, is to say that silver is no longer fit for money purposes; and to say this, were to say in substance that an end should be put to silver mining at Butte, Montana; at Leadville; at Eureka, Nevada, and at Tombstone, in Arizona; at the Ontario and Horn Silver mines, in Utah; in the rich mines of Wood River, Idaho, and in the San Juan region of Colorado, not to speak of the silver mines of Mexico, to reach which so much American money is being spent in the building of railways. Of all peoples ours have the greatest industrial interest in maintaining silver as a money metal and at the rate given to the extent of a full legal-tender circulation of $1,000,000,000 in such leading commercial states as France, Germany, Austria, Holland, Italy and Belgium—a rate, we repeat, 3.06 per cent. higher than that given to silver in our dollar of 412½ grains. Therefore, it were unspeakably insensitive for our government to do anything whatsoever calculated to make irremediable the present depreciation of the commodity-value of silver below the value given to the metal in so leading a commercial country as France. Should the United States decide not to coin hereafter the petty sum of fifty cents annually, per head of its population, even at the rate of 16 of silver to 1 of gold, when the French people have a silver circulation of $600,000,000, at the ratio of gold of 15½ to one, for a population not exceeding 38,000,000 souls, would in effect decide that silver is permanently so depreciated and unstable in value that the country which produces the most of the world's annual supply of the metal does not any longer regard it as fit for money purposes. And he who does not see and comprehend this is an incurable blockhead, and at the same time a particularly mischievous one, if located at and teaching it from a mining camp.—Mining Review.

Thurlof Weed, who died the other day, was 85 years old. That in America is regarded as a very old age. It gave Mr. Weed distinction, as much as anything else, in his city. Comparatively speaking, Mr. Weed was an old man, but, in fact, he came nearer living out the measure of his days than the majority of men. There is no valid reason why, under favorable conditions, a man should not live 100 years. All animal life is found to be constituted with a stock of vitality sufficient to run it five times the period the particular animal requires to mature. For example, the horse matures in about five years, and will be dead in about twenty-five; the dog matures in about two years, and will be dead in about ten—and so on through the list; but a man who matures in about twenty years, and ought, therefore, to live 100, is dead, on an average, at 35. The failure of the rule in the case of the man does not prove that the rule is not applicable in his case, but simply that he fails to comply with the conditions of life. The lower animals come nearer complying with the conditions than man. Man wastes his stock of vitality, and is bankrupt before his term is half spent. There is nothing dearer to man, it is said, than his life, and yet there is nothing with which he is so improvident and reckless. Wheeling Register.

The "Mum" Sociable.

"Lend me your revolver," said a young man, with his nose skinned, his eye blackened, and his white necktie around under his ear, and one tail of his dress-coat torn off, as he came into a West Side saloon.
"What's the matter with you?" said the bar-tender, looking ugly at him.
"Do you suppose I am going to lend you a revolver to kill somebody, and then be arrested for being an accessory?" Not much! But what's the matter? You look as though you came out of a window. Was anything the matter with the door?"
The young man took a wet towel and sopped the blood off his nose, and then said:
"You look like a man that can be trusted, and whose advice would be safe to follow in an emergency, and I'll tell you about the murder I contemplated, and maybe you can give me some points, as you have no doubt murdered many people. The trouble is right here. Our lodge is to give a 'mum social' this evening. You know what a mum social is. Young people go to a house and sit around all the evening, and keep their mouths shut, and never say a word till a signal is given; then they all make up for lost time and talk for all that is out. (Is my nose bleeding yet? Thanks.) They wanted me to go, and I just came from there. That is, I came from the house next door. You see, I went to the wrong house and rung the bell. A man in his shirt-sleeves came to the door and said 'Good evening,' but I wasn't going to be caught speaking, because you have to pay a forfeit if you speak. So I just walked right in and pulled off my overcoat and hung it up, and hung my hat on the hat-rack. The man looked a little bit annoyed, but he asked me if the weather was not softening up a little. I smiled, but didn't say anything, and I walked into the sitting-room. I thought I was the first one there, and I felt very awkward. The man watched me pretty closely, and finally he said I had the advantage of him; and I smiled again, but didn't say anything. Now, that I think of it, I noticed that he unbuttoned his shirt-sleeves and began to roll them up. He asked me to what circumstances he was indebted for the honor of this visit, and I thought he was trying to get me off my guard, so I smiled one of my best two-for-a-quarter smiles, and looked at him as much as to say: 'You can't play any of your games on the undersigned.' The man came up behind me and hissed in my ear: 'What is your little game, any way?' Well, I wasn't going to speak, and give myself away, so I looked at him sort of impudently, as much as to say: 'Oh, go and chase yourself around your feet,' and then I thought lightning had struck me. He took me by the throat with one hand, and by the vicinity of the coat-tails with the other hand, and he choked me so my tongue ran out; and his wife screamed, and said: 'Don't kill him,' and the man hustled me out into the hall and opened the front door, and he picked me up bodily and threw me out into a snow-bank five feet deep. I struggled a little going out of the door, and ran my nose against the door-casing, and I guess he forgot to let go of my coat-tail when I went out. I struck head first in the snow, and before I could dig my head out the door closed, and I could not explain my conduct to the man. I was so mad I could not have explained anyway. Just as I got out of the snow-bank and shook myself the door opened, and the man threw out my overcoat, and hat and overshoes, and he told his wife to hurry up with the shotgun, and he would take me on the fly as I went over the fence. Well I didn't wait for no shotgun, but grabbed my coat and things, and came down the street on a gallop. I met a lot of the young people going up, and as I turned the corner I saw them going into the next house to the one that I visited, and that was the first I knew of my mistake. Now, what I want is for you to tell me whether I had better shoot that man or kill him with a club. I was raised in the South, and my warm Southern blood will not stand any such treatment."

After Queen Victoria slipped down in descending the stairs at Windsor, the telegrams tell us that she went to her room to ascertain the extent of her damages. Imagine the dignified old lady cowering up her leg on a chair and having a look at her knee. Had any of the gentlemen in waiting been on hand, there was a chance to obtain the order of the garter.—S. F. Exchange.

It is reported that a lady in Boston was promised a sealskin cloak if she would not speak for an hour. She set her lips for silence, but at the end of a few minutes she exclaimed, "Mind you, it's got to be a $250 one."

Law in Relation to Newspapers.

First. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered as wishing to continue their subscription.
Second. If subscribers order the discontinuance of their periodicals, the publishers may continue to send them until all arrearages are paid.
Third. If subscribers neglect to or refuse to take their periodicals from the office to which they have been directed, they are held responsible till they have settled their bill and ordered their paper discontinued.
Fourth. If subscribers move to other places without informing the publisher, and the papers are sent to the former directions they are held responsible.
Fifth. The courts have decided that refusing to take periodicals from the office, or removing and leaving them uncollected for is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.
Sixth. Any person who receives a newspaper and makes use of it, whether he has ordered it or not, is held in law a subscriber.

Mum and Insanity.

The theory of the close connection between mum and insanity was never more closely established than in the recent case of Mr. Bertram Bolter, of this city, who was an inmate of a private asylum here for ten years. At the expiration of that term he suddenly recovered his reason, and was able to give a perfectly lucid account of how he had lost it. In 1878 Mr. B. lived next door to a boy who was learning the piano. The lad was an ardent young musician, and one night played, "Come Birdie, Come," 189 times in succession, in order to learn it properly. Mr. Bolter was found on the floor of his bedroom next day devouring a Eureka hair mattress, and a raving maniac. On recovering his reason he told the above facts to his keeper, who, forgetting that hearing the tune again might agitate his patient, said thoughtlessly: "Why, that's rather a pretty tune, I always thought. Goes something like this, don't it?" and he whistled the first four bars plaintively. "How, that?" he said. "Is that like it?" But the query was in vain. His jaw had fallen, and Mr. Bolter was dead.—[San Francisco News-Letter.

Consumption has hitherto been regarded as a disease of the lungs, which cannot be reached directly except by inhalation, and the value of that form of medication is problematical. A new theory of the disease, called the Salisbury theory, makes it one of unhealthy alimentation. According to this view, it is the fermenting of food in the stomach, which furnishes to the circulation noxious material that affects the lungs on reaching those organs. Granting the truth of the theory, we shall have to consider consumption as curable. All that needs to be done is to use only such food as will not ferment in the stomach, and to clean out the organ occasionally by a judicious use of warm water, with simple tonics before meals to aid the digestive process. A weak solution of ferric per sulphate is recommended for inhalation to check hemorrhage in a severe stage of the disease. The idea is worthy the attention of the many who are disposed to be in the initial stages of consumption.

A poor man may be honored, though his draft may not
